

Bikram Raj Pandey – A short biography

An engineer by undergraduate qualification, I entered the world of health and safety as a Factory Inspector back in Nepal. As my interest in health and safety grew gradually, I went to pursue higher education in the area with a doctorate focusing on understanding of risks and worker participation in health and safety. Human factors and ergonomics, particularly participatory ergonomic design, has always been my area of special interest.

The knowledge and application of my HF&E understanding took greater shape during my work in the role of Workplace Health and Safety Advocate with the NZ Defence Force. The focus being awareness, education and guidance on prevention and management of discomfort, pain, and injury at work for the civilian population providing support services in Defence.
